Dear Friends,

By any measure, 2014 was a busy and productive year for the International Center for Law and Religion Studies. In addition to our annual international symposium in Provo, we participated in or co-organized more than 25 other conferences, held on every continent except Antarctica.

In February I was invited to give a keynote address at a regional consultation held in Jakarta on “Promoting the Freedom of Religion or Belief in ASEAN.” This event helped foster two significant new studies on religious freedom issues in the ASEAN region. In May, the Center co-organized a regional conference in Stellenbosch, South Africa, which witnessed the organization of the African Consortium for Law and Religion Studies. We also co-organized a conference in June in Como, Italy on “Religions and Constitutional Transitions in the Muslim Mediterranean: The Pluralistic Moment,” which provided the occasion for the formal launch of a new Center on Law and Religion in the Mediterranean Region at Insubria University.

In July we launched a new major initiative in Provo: a Religious Freedom Annual Review, designed both to provide continuing legal education credit for lawyers and to provide information and resources for others interested.

We continued our long-standing annual tradition of co-organizing a conference at Central European University in Hungary (this year's on “Varieties of Secularism”), as well as our more recent support for the Oxford Journal of Law and Religion Academy in June and events to support the work of the UN Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion and Belief at the time of his annual report in October in New York. We also continued involvement in conferences and training programs in Latin America, India, China, Vietnam, Indonesia, and former Soviet space (this year with a conference in Poland). In November we helped co-sponsor the first G20 Interfaith Summit in Brisbane, Australia. We hope to organize similar events at future G20 Summits.

On the publications front, our near daily Headlines transmission has won acclaim from religious freedom experts worldwide; we have launched four Facebook pages, a YouTube Channel, and a Twitter account, and we are poised for a major upgrade to our websites in 2015.

In all of this we are ever conscious of how much of our success depends upon collaboration with others. We are particularly grateful for our outstanding International Advisory Council, who work energetically to identify new sources of support. Many of the IAC have contributed in person, once again this year, to the success of our international conferences. We are always grateful as well for support from our Academic Advisory Board, and from so many others who make the global scope of our activities possible.

The significance of religion and of freedom of religion or belief to modern life becomes more obvious with each passing year, and we are grateful to be able to work in support of this great principle in collaboration and friendship with so many others.

Sincerely yours,

WELCOME
The mission of the International Center for Law and Religion Studies is to help secure the blessing of freedom of religion or belief for all people.

One of the critical needs of our time is for greater expertise and dialogue at the intersection where religion and belief come into contact with law and government. We live in a world where violence related to religion is on the rise and where approximately three-fourths of the earth’s population lives in countries with high or very high restrictions on religion. A growing body of evidence points to a strong correlation between protecting religious freedom and increased levels of security, economic prosperity, rule of law, education, health, and other social goods. The International Center for Law and Religion Studies is a global leader in contributing to religious freedom expertise and dialogue. As an academic institute at a major American law school, the Center partners with universities and organizations in dozens of countries to build the field of law and religion studies.

Since its inception in 2000, the Center has:
- Helped organize more than 160 academic conferences and workshops in approximately 45 countries.
- Engaged with thousands of scholars, government officials, and community and religious leaders.
- Consulted on proposed legislation and constitutional amendments in 52 countries.
- Produced numerous scholarly works and training materials on church-state legal issues.
- Involved more than 1,000 students in its work.

These activities build the intellectual infrastructure of religious freedom reform and support the adoption of sound legal policies.

Organization and scheduling of the Center’s many conferences, including logistics, travel, accommodations all around the world, fall upon her shoulders. Most especially, the continued success of the annual International Law and Religion Symposium would be impossible without Deborah’s competence and tireless efforts in the year-round efforts of organization, planning, communication, and coordination of events and facilities, of faculty, students, delegates, hosts, and visitors, all of which combine to bring to pass such a complex undertaking. Everyone in the Center’s office at Brigham Young University is utterly dependent upon her service.

SPRING MEETING

The Annual Spring Meeting of the International Advisory Council took place in Salt Lake City April 3-4. The focus was “Religious Freedom in a Changing World.” Elder Bruce C. Hafen, an emeritus General Authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, addressed “Family Law, Marriage, and the Temple.” The Spring Meeting included briefings about emerging issues in religious freedom and developments around the world.

COMO

From May 28 to June 6 IAC members travelled to Italy to participate in the “IAC Italy Study Group: The Legacy of Lorenzo Snow.” BYU Law School Dean Jim Rasband and Professors Cole Durham and Jim Toronto accompanied the group as they toured Florence, the Cinque Terre, the Piedmont region, and beautiful Lake Como. They participated in a significant conference on law and religion in the Muslim Mediterranean and witnessed the launch of an important new center at Insubria University in Como dedicated to law, religion, and the economy in the Mediterranean region.

SYMPOSIUM

The International Advisory Council gathered in Provo, Utah for the 21st Annual International Law and Religion Symposium, where they helped befriend and host more than 80 VIP delegates attending the symposium from 40 different nations. The symposium’s theme was “Varieties of Secularism, Religion, and the Law.” Members of the IAC gathered for their own special devotional with Elder Robert F. Orton, an emeritus General Authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.
The ICLRS Student Research Fellows program invites students from BYU Law School to participate in international externships and guided individual research projects. Fellows gain practical experience as well as significant research and writing experience, important for launching and sustaining their careers, while enjoying opportunities for personal encounters with global leaders in the field of religious freedom, all the while offering vital service to the work of the Center and to the cause of religious freedom worldwide.

This year’s students — Ryan Andersen, Eva Brady, Bennett Briggs, Morgan Brungard, Victoria Chen, Ryan Davis, Tara Fitzgerald, Travis Hyer, Branden Kartchner, Daniel Lyman, Annalee Moser, Monique Mullenaux, Lauren Robins, Brian Sabey, Cade Shiozaki, and Jarvis Yat-Him Yau — spent time in Argentina, Brazil, Dominican Republic, Germany, Ghana, Hong Kong, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Russia, South Africa, and Salt Lake City before returning to Provo to complete their assignments.
More than 80 distinguished delegates from 40 countries gathered at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, October 5-8, 2014, to participate in the 21st annual International Law and Religion Symposium: “Varieties of Secularism, Religion, and the Law.” The keynote speaker at the opening session was U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch, to whom the Center awarded its 2014 Distinguished Service Award. Senator Hatch has had a prominent role in religious freedom legislation during his career in the United States Senate over multiple decades. Of particular note is that he was a principle sponsor and mover of the landmark Religious Freedom Restoration Act. Senator Hatch provided an interesting account of the passage of that law, which was recently upheld in the Burwell v. Hobby Lobby; and he shared several important practical, political, and legal perspectives on religious freedom.

Plenary sessions of the Symposium focused on secularism and social tensions, different types of secularism, and the difference between secularism, as an ideological end, and secularity, as a framework for pluralism. Break out sessions of the Symposium considered religious freedom issues in various parts of the world, including sessions on Latin America, Mexico and Brazil, Southeast Asia, Central and Western Europe, Australia, the Middle East and Northern Africa, Far East Asia, Western Africa, Russia, Ukraine and Armenia.

This year’s Symposium was extremely successful in large measure because of the generous support provided by the Cornerstone Endowment and the help of the many volunteers, hosts, and students who assisted with all aspects of the event.
TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL INTERNATIONAL LAW AND RELIGION SYMPOSIUM
Insubria University on beautiful Lake Como was the setting for the 2014 regional conference for the Islamic World. This conference focused on law and religion in the Muslim Mediterranean. It was an outgrowth of a similar conference in Como, Italy in 2010 and a conference in Ifrane, Morocco at Al-Akhawayn University in November 2013.

The conference provided an opportunity to bring together scholars, government officials, and civil society leaders from the Middle East, North Africa, and southern Europe to discuss three basic questions related to religious freedom: constitutionalism, the role of religious parties, and the status of religious minorities. In addition to several individual speakers, the conference consisted mainly of a series of panel discussions: one on Italy, and the others on countries affected by the recent political and social turmoil in the Middle East: Tunisia, Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, Palestine, Algeria, and Jordan.

The 2014 conference provided the impetus and the venue for launching a new academic center dedicated to law and religion studies in the Muslim Mediterranean: The Insubria Center on Religion, Law, and Economy in the Mediterranean Area, Insubria University, Como, Italy (REDESM). This center promises to become a regular partner on religion-law activities in the region.
THE 14TH COLLOQUIUM OF THE LATIN AMERICAN CONSORTIUM FOR RELIGIOUS LIBERTY: RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN THE CONTEXT OF CRIMINAL LAW
SEPTEMBER 1-2, 2014, NATIONAL ACADEMY OF LAW OF CORDOBA

The colloquium was successful from the perspective of strengthening religious freedom scholarship in Latin America and building the network of Latin American experts. The Center has been intimately involved with the Latin American Consortium since the beginning, and members of the Consortium are rising to become recognized experts not only in their own region but elsewhere. As a side event of cultural and religious significance, Scott Isaacson, a senior advisor for Latin America, and Professor Gary Doxey were able to arrange a VIP tour for members of the Consortium to visit the construction site Cordoba Temple site of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF THE ARGENTINE COUNCIL FOR RELIGIOUS LIBERTY: RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN THE 21ST CENTURY: RELIGION, STATE, AND SOCIETY
SEPTEMBER 3-5, 2014, UNIVERSIDAD NACIONAL DE CÓRDOBA

This impressive international event was held in the Faculty of Law and Social Science of the Universidad Nacional de Córdoba, one of oldest universities in the Western Hemisphere. Participants included academic, government, religious, and civil society leaders from all over Latin America, Spain, and a few from North America. The Congress examined religious freedom holistically in the 21st Century. The pope sent his personal greeting to be read in the opening session. A cardinal from the Holy See spoke in the closing session, along with Professor Cole Durham and Professor Juan Navarro Floria.

In addition to these conferences, the Center was active in other ways in Latin America during 2014. Professor Gary Doxey, together with our long-time colleague from Argentina, Juan Navarro Floria, were invited as outside experts to attend a mark-up session of a comprehensive new bill regarding religious organizations that is before the National Congress of the Dominican Republic. In addition, the Center assisted with legislation in Costa Rica and Bolivia and provided research for a brief submitted to the Constitutional Court of Colombia.
This was the first of a major series of annual conferences in which the Center is engaged with other major partners. The G20 Interfaith Summit brought scholars, lawyers, political office holders, and other opinion leaders together with faith and interfaith leaders from around the world for three days of discussion and dialogue as a substantial contribution to the G20 Economic Forum. The conference showcased the scholarly and societal contributions of various faith traditions and philosophies from around the world. This conference also created opportunities for communication and relationship building and raised the profile of participating communities, groups and organizations.

Cole Durham was a moderator for one of the conference panels, and presented on the panel entitled “Religious Rights and Economic Development: International Perspectives.” Conference panels focused on religious freedom’s impact on the economy, humanitarian aid, social cohesion and charitable giving, among other things. Attendees came from countries all around the Pacific region, Asia, the Middle East, South America, and Europe. Given the number of attendees, this conference was almost double the size of the Center’s annual International Symposium in Provo.

The Center is helping to organize the next G20 Interfaith Summit in Istanbul, Turkey, November 16-18, 2015.
This conference provided an opportunity to bring together scholars, government officials, and civil society leaders from Eastern Europe to discuss questions of functioning of religious organizations and religious freedom at Jagellonian University, the oldest university in Eastern Europe. The Center supported the conference as its major Eastern Europe initiative for 2014.

Cole Durham was the keynote speaker in the historical Aulum Collegium hall at Jagellonian University. Professor Elizabeth Clark played a major role in helping to organize the conference and participated as a presenter. Most of the conference consisted of twelve panel discussions, which covered such topics as “Religion and European Legal Values of Democracy, the Rule of Law, and Human Rights”; “Legal Regulation of the Activities of Religious Organizations in Modern Society”; “The Place of Religion in Education: Problems and Perspectives on Solutions in Various Countries”; and “Religion and Mass Media”; among others. More than sixty presentations were shared during the discussions by presenters from Armenia, Belarus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Great Britain, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Russia, Ukraine, and the United States.
Scholars, government officials, religious leaders and advocates for religious freedom from diverse religious traditions throughout sub-Saharan Africa came together to discuss themes ranging from religious persecution, marriage and divorce, state registration of religion and the autonomy of religious societies. The program included some 60 presentations by participants from over a dozen countries.

The capstone of this year’s conference was the organization of the African Consortium for Law and Religion Studies (ALCARS) during a formal meeting at the conclusion of the conference. The mission of ALCARS is to help create and nurture the field of law and religion studies in Africa by co-sponsoring future conferences and publications with assistance from the Center. Keynote addresses by Justice Albie Sachs (Retired) of the South African Constitutional Court and Chief Justice Mogoeng Mogoeng of the South African Constitutional Court garnered attention from the national media of South Africa. Each made an eloquent plea for the advancement of religious freedom as well as for greater justice and morality in society. Justice Albie Sachs’ remarks were made more eloquent by the fact that he lost an arm and much of his sight in a terrorist blast while pursuing justice for black Africans under Apartheid. Chief Justice Mogoeng Mogoeng, an ordained Pentecostal minister, spoke passionately for the positive societal role religious values play, such as in the formulation of laws to promote morality and eliminate corruption.
More than 100 participants and presenters from 20 countries joined ICLRS at the Second Annual Oxford Journal of Law and Religion Summer Academy at St. Hugh's College, Oxford University. The summer academy is a major international event that brings together leading academics, policymakers, international officials, and practicing lawyers working in the field of law, religion, and international relations. The 2014 event included parliamentarians and other government officials from around the world, editors of the Oxford Journal of Law and Religion, members of clergy, representatives of NGOs and think-tanks, academics and organizational researchers, as well as students, publishers, journalists, and other visitors.

Four keynote addresses were delivered during the Academy: by Baroness Elizabeth Berridge, Member, House of Lords, and Chair, All-Party Parliamentary Group on International Freedom of Religion or Belief of the British Parliament; Professor Mary Ann Glendon, Learned Hand Professor of Law, Harvard Law School, and Commissioner, United States Commission on International Religious Freedom; Professor Paul Fiddes, Professor of Systematic Theology in the University of Oxford and formerly Principal of Regent's Park College and Chairman of the Theology Faculty, and Professor Marie-Claire Foblets, Director, Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology in Halle, Germany, and Professor of Law at the Catholic University of Leuven/Louvain, where she was formerly Head of the Institute for Migration Law and Legal Anthropology.
CERTIFICATE TRAINING PROGRAMS

The Center has established influential Certificate Training Programs in both China and Vietnam

China

The fifth China Certificate Training Program on Religion and Rule of Law took place July 28-August 8, 2014 in Beijing, China. The event was organized under the auspices of the Peking University School of Law, and the Beijing Foreign Studies University School of Law. As a support to these institutions, the International Center for Law and Religion Studies, in partnership with the Institute for Global Engagement, provided help with the curriculum and arranged international faculty for the training. As in previous years, the two-week program included a major one-day academic conference that attracted about 100 experts and participants. The theme of the conference was “Religion and the Rule of Law: Legislation on Religious Organization.” The training program and the conference received coverage in the country’s academic and legal media.

The curriculum for the training was taken from the Chinese translation of the seminal textbook, Law and Religion: National, International, and Comparative Perspectives by Cole Durham and Brett Scharffs. Prominent Chinese scholars joined with an outstanding group of international experts to provide the training. More than 56 university professors, religious leaders, researchers, judges, and advanced graduate students completed the training and were awarded certificates. Many of the participants expressed desire to engage in further research in the field of law and religion. Two Chinese scholars were invited to visit BYU for a semester to further their research.

Vietnam

The Center was pleased to help organize the third annual Certificate Training Program on Religion and the Rule of Law in Vietnam. This year’s 10-day training program took place July 14-23 in Da Nang, the major city of Vietnam’s central region. The training program featured leading Vietnamese academics working on law and religion issues in their country, along with an illustrious faculty of experts from other parts of the world. The event was reported on TV news and in four Vietnamese newspapers. In connection with the training, two visiting scholars have spent time at BYU Law School to further their research on religion and the rule of law, with more scholars to come in subsequent years.

The program was held under the auspices of Vietnam National University (VNU), Da Nang; the University of Social Sciences and Humanities—VNU, Hanoi; the Da Nang Foreign Language University; the International Center for Law and Religion Studies at BYU; and the Institute for Global Engagement (IGE). This program is part of an unprecedented joint agreement signed in 2013 between VNU, the Center, and IGE to work together to pursue excellence in law and religion studies. Professors Brett Scharffs and Cole Durham led much of the training program using the Vietnamese translation of their textbook, Law and Religion: National, International, and Comparative Perspectives. A significant new grant from the John Templeton Foundation and a generous donation from David and Linda Nearon made the continuation of this annual training possible.
The inaugural installment of an important new component of the Center’s work took place on the BYU campus in Provo, Utah on July 7-9, 2014: the Religious Freedom Annual Review. The Annual Review is a new conference series aimed at specialists and non-specialists alike—lawyers and non-lawyers, educators, students, and interested members of the public. Its purpose is to provide up-to-date and stimulating presentations and discussions on important topics and current developments in religious freedom law, both domestically and internationally. The Annual Review is a natural evolution of our Discussion Series Lectures over the past several years and reflects that series’ enthusiastic reception with students, professionals, and the public.

More than 100 participants attended the First Annual Review in 2014, entitled “Religious Freedom in a Secular World.” The event included panels on the U.S. Supreme Court’s recent Hobby Lobby decision and its effect on religious freedom laws in the U.S., a discussion of religious freedom implications of LGBT rights, the economic case for religious freedom, and a host of other issues. An entire day was devoted to international topics including international instruments protecting religious freedom for individuals and religious organizations. CLE credit, including ethics and civility, was available for lawyers and continues to be available through recordings of the conference. The 2015 Annual Review is scheduled for July 6-8.
